DELAY IS DANGEROUS

Few persons live to middle age without learning by experience the truth of this old adage. In nothing has it been proved more disastrously than in the disposition of estates. A man or woman shrinks from making a will—puts it off and death comes. Then the law steps in and makes a division which may be entirely different from what the owner of the property desired. Persons who were to be provided for nothing, and perhaps a solemn duty has been neglected. All sorts of contingencies may occur. Distress and privation may come to those who were fully provided for in the mind of the dead man.

It is unwise for any one to put off this important duty. Make your will now and arrange your affairs as you wish, and when you name your executor let it be.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—Senator Hill is up in arms against the President again. He spent this afternoon cleaning his guns, sharpening his knives, pointing the "tiger's" claws and laying in a stock of ammunition.

Last week Mr. Hill won a victory after a long fight with the administration forces. The nomination of Hornblower to the Supreme Bench was then the bone of contention, and the boss of the "snappers" secured its rejection. Today President Cleveland sent to the Senate the nomination of Wheeler H. Peckham, of New York, an "anti-snapper."

retary Gresham and his immediate predecessor long-lived enemies, instead of the State Department with a view to re-organizing the personnel and official character of the late administration would have been more bitter. There was talk for some time of throwing the entire cabinet with the commission except the commissioners themselves.

The attitude on the part of the United States contingent by representatives of this administration not only hampered our representatives in Paris, but were enough to have been true, to have condemned them to a felon's cell. There is no doubt that the impression prevailed at the State Department that "a good political point" could be made by circulating reports against the character of our people in Paris and those who had sent them there.

An army paymaster had been detailed to pay our commissioners and others attached to the work, but under the hand of the Secretary of State Foster had drawn that section of the law making the appropriation, and he had drawn it so that it was not necessary to file vouchers in detail.

There was a good deal of discretionary power lodged in the hands of the Secretary of State. All of the accounts and vouchers were paid and the vouchers sent to the Treasury Department, as a mere matter of form, and it was not until the accounts of the clerks, and of an interpreter sent from Washington with the commission, that the Treasury Department was notified that the vouchers did not reach the Treasury Department with those of the other commissioners and our commissioners and counsel. The Controller, a Democrat, of course, promptly passed on the vouchers of the paymaster, and the Treasury Department was notified that the vouchers did not reach the Treasury Department with those of the other commissioners and our commissioners and counsel.
